How to: Change a web page's page title from the PowerShell command line. Open up the web.config file in an editor, add the following into it (don't forget to include the quotes of your command): 1 15Q: How do I reference an array without using [] I'm using JavaScript. I know that if I want to reference an array I can do something like this: var foo = ['bar', 'baz']; However, I don't want to do that. I want to know how I can reference the items in the array by name without using []? I am looking for a solution that works like this: var foo = { 'bar': 'baz', 'qux': 'anything' }; I am looking for an equivalent to Python's {}. I want to map my keys like this. I have tried doing this: var foo = {}; foo[bar] = baz; But it doesn't work. If I console.log(foo), it shows that there is no {bar} property. A: There's no built-in way to store {foo: bar, baz: 123} to the same object, but you can write a function that turns that into the mapping you want: function objToMap(obj) { var out = {}; for (var k in obj) { if (obj.hasOwnProperty(k)) out[k] = obj[k]; } return out; } A: I would go with something like this, and it's easily extensible function get(key, obj){ if(obj){ return obj[key]; } return undefined; } var foo = { 'bar': 'baz', 'qux': 'anything' }; var m = get(foo, "bar"); console.log(m); Or, to create a global setting for all values... function get(key, obj){ if(obj){ return obj[key]; }
